Dr. Jim Withers recounts his 22 years of work with the street homeless of Pittsburgh, from the initial days of dressing as a homeless person to the emergence of "street medicine" as a global field of medicine. The core of the street medicine movement is to "Go To The People," providing care and connection that is grounded in their reality and therefore more effective. The lessons from the streets have proved to transcend health care and provided insight into how we can build better communities.